Preregistration

Preregistration for advanced lecture courses (numbered 401-449) and seminars (numbered 450-489) will take place using the online “preference selection” system. The system will be restricted to senior majors in economics or EP&E. Eligible seniors will use the system to express rank-ordered preferences for up to five courses/seminars. Students will be able to enter and revise their preferences from 9:00 am on Monday, November 30, until 6:00 pm Wednesday, December 9, 2020. Click here to access preference selection site.

After preregistration closes, all students who preregistered will be assigned to one advanced lecture course or seminar. Every attempt will be made to meet students’ preferences, and in cases where caps on enrollment bind, students will be chosen by lottery. The system can be accessed by clicking at this link: “Seminar Preregistration”. Seniors will receive instructions on how to access the system before it opens.

Senior majors in economics and EP&E who do not preregister, as well as underclass students and students who are not majors in economics or EP&E, will be able to shop advanced lecture courses or seminars that have not filled up during preregistration. Seniors who did preregister are also welcome to shop additional advanced lectures and seminars at this time. All students must have completed at least two of three core courses in intermediate microeconomics, intermediate macroeconomics, and econometrics before enrolling in an advanced lecture course or seminar.

There will not be waiting lists for classes that fill up during preregistration. The caps will be set high (22 for seminars), and once they are reached, those classes are full.

The advanced lecture courses and seminars being offered in spring 2021 are listed below, along with brief descriptions.
