This workshop is designed as a forum for graduate students and faculty with an interest in international trade and economic problems of developing countries. Faculty, students, and a limited number of outside speakers will discuss research work in progress. Student participants will be encouraged to develop and present a workshop paper in each term. The scope of topics includes: international trade (theory, policy and empirical analysis), agricultural and rural development, industrial development, employment, poverty and income distribution, structural adjustment and macroeconomic stabilization and interaction of international trade and development.

Semester offered: Fall