Economics Professors to Participate in Faculty Bulldog Days

Thursday, September 28, 2017

Five professors of Economics will open their classes to the Yale community during the week of October 2 - 6, for the Fall 2017 Faculty Bulldog Days. The week-long event provides an opportunity for Yale faculty and staff across the campus to attend courses and to become more engaged in the Yale community of scholars.

According the initiative’s mission, faculty open their classrooms to their peers in the “spirit of making teaching more public.” The event presents an opportunity to observe the wealth of deep knowledge addressed in Yale classrooms every day.

The list of Economics faculty, course titles, times and locations are listed below:

- Macroeconomics - William Nordhaus
  Monday, October 2, 11:35 AM - 12:50 PM - Luce Hall Auditorium

- Intro to Microeconomics - Steven Berry
  Monday, October 2, 1:00 PM - 2:15 PM - Sterling Law Auditorium
Beginning in the spring 2015, the Yale’s Center for Teaching and Learning sponsored initiative has seen more than 100 faculty open their courses to peers each term. Past Bulldog Days have seen more than 150 faculty register to attend at least one of the open courses, with more than 600 unique people having taken part in the activity.

Registration is open until Thursday, September 28 at 6 p.m. and classes will take place Monday, Oct. 2 - Friday, Oct. 6.

A full list of courses can be found on the registration page.

Source URL: https://economics.yale.edu/news/economics-professors-participate-faculty-bulldog-days